PJH welcomes new Part G water-efficiency Standard

(ref: PJH305 – August 2009)

The PJH Group has launched the “ECO” bathroom under its Moods range, a new water-efficient bathroom that is both fashionably compact and eco-friendly. Designed with the Government’s revised Building Regulations Part G Standard in mind, the new ECO suite is the ideal choice to meet the new water-efficiency goal of 125 litres per person, per day, applicable from October on all new build homes (current average water use is 150 litres per person).

WC’s use about 30% of the water used in an average household, and many older style models can use up to 13 litres per flush. The new ECO close-coupled WC reduces this dramatically featuring a dual flush with the industry’s lowest WC water usage to date – a perfect flush at either 4 litres or just 2.6 litres. With an average household flushing 5,000 times a year it’s apparent of the savings to be made with the ECO loo – both financially and environmentally.

The ECO Bath from Moods is equally as water-efficient, cleverly designed and shaped with a reduced depth, to offer luxury bathing using just 140 litres of water, compared to the standard bath which uses in excess of 200 litres. With baths using approximately 15% of the total water usage in an average household (up to 15,000 litres of water per year), this again means significant savings and improved water-efficiency to meet the Governments revised Part G standard. Measuring in at a spacious 1700 x700mm, the ECO bath does not compromise on comfort or style and will save the home owner around 30% of water.

To complete the suite, a coordinating 550 x 390mm ECO basin and pedestal with smooth contours and elegant styling is also available.

“As well as enabling the home owner to run an extremely water-efficient home with substantially lower water bills, the new ECO bathroom will appeal to housebuilders and developers needing to conform with the new Part G regulations on all new build projects,” said Lucy Humphries, Bathroom Category Director for PJH Group.
